Andante moderato.

By the gate a youth stood pleading with his sweetheart. She was In the fields where once they wandered, now he's straying. And the go ing to the city far away, "In the leaves are turning all to gold again; "She'll re - har vest-time we'll wed," he heard her murmur, "I'll be turn" he seems to hear the soft wind sigh ing, For he's thinking of you dear heart day by day." Golden Fall in all its splendor brought no dreaming of his darling, his Elaine. Soon her voice up-on the air is softly message, Still he longs to see her smiling face a-calling, And with joy his fond heart now is beating gain, In the fields the merry harvest songs are fast, In his arms she whispers, 'I've come back to ringing, So he wrote this loving letter to Elaine.

wed you, For I cherish still those sweet words of the past'.
Refrain.

"Are you coming, sweet Elaine, are you coming back again? The leaves have turned, they're bringing in the grain; For our wedding day is near, and you promised to be here, In the golden Autumn time, my sweet Elaine..."
